Background

Hampshire County, created in 1753 by the Virginia General Assembly from parts of Augusta and Frederick counties, is the oldest county in what is now the state of West Virginia. Originally known as Pearsall's Flats, Romney was chartered as the county seat in 1762.

The local courts of the colonial time period oversaw such matters as tax collection, tavern licenses, road work, estate settlements, guardianships, and criminal and civil disputes. Gabriel Jones (1724-1806) was an early clerk of court for Hampshire County. Appointed by Lord Fairfax, the original landholder, Jones held the office for 25 years. He lived near Port Republic in what is now Rockingham County, Virginia, and was also the clerk of other area courts. An attorney, Jones traveled around the region signing court documents, some written in his own hand, and some in those of his deputies. The last Hampshire County clerk of court during the time period of this collection was Andrew Wodrow, who served from 1782 until 1814.

Many of Hampshire County's early court records are missing, due in part to difficulties during the Civil War. John Baker White was clerk of courts in 1861, when the Union forces arrived in Romney. Concerned about the safety of the court records, White loaded the ledger books onto wagons and sent them to Winchester, Virginia. The loose paper records were left behind in the court house. About 1863, when the ledger books appeared to be in imminent danger of destruction, they were removed to Front Royal, and then moved again to Luray. Capt. Christian S. White and a company of 60 Confederates arrived in Luray just as Union troops were in the process of destroying the records. Shots were exchanged, the Yankees fled, and the Confederates threw about 150 record books into a wagon bound for North Carolina.

The hidden court record books were returned to Hampshire County following the Civil War. The loose papers that had been left behind at the court house in Romney were not as well preserved, as the building was used for a stable by the Union soldiers, some of whom may have removed or destroyed certain records. It is also thought that some of the earliest court records were never deposited at the court house at all, but were kept instead at the office of Lord Fairfax and may never be accounted for.

For more information about the history of Hampshire County, West Virginia, consult History of Hampshire County, West Virginia, From Its Earliest Settlement to the Present, by Hu Maxwell and H. L. Swisher (1897). A detailed account of the early court records can be found in chapter XXXIII, pages

361-372. A biography of Gabriel Jones is provided on pages 392-395 of Annals of Augusta County, Virginia, With Reminiscences Illustrative of the Vicissitudes of its Pioneer Settlers . . ., by Joseph A. Waddell (1886).

Scope and Content

The collection contains 164 documents related to cases presented in the early courts of Hampshire County, (West) Virginia. Most of the documents are dated during the colonial time period or shortly after (1754-1789), with about 30 items undated. The records are related to bills, statements of accounts, promissory notes, bonds, summons, estates, road construction and maintenance, and licenses for keeping taverns (ordinaries).

Statement of Arrangement

The documents are arranged in chronological order from 1754 to 1789, followed by two folders of undated records.
